Commentary

Bond markets endured a torrid time during the last quarter as the closure of the Strait of Hormuz caused an inflation scare and meant that the prospect of interest rate cuts evaporated; investors began to fear imminent hikes instead. Added to that was the uncertainty about how hawkish or dovish the new chairman of the US Federal Reserve would be, and ongoing political risk in the United Kingdom. May saw multi-year highs in bond yields and there were fears that serious shortages across a broad range of commodities could result in a sustained increase in inflation. It may therefore come as a surprise that, over the course of the calendar quarter, bonds actually produced a reasonable positive return. Given the continued health of the global economy, widespread political risk and persistent government deficits, we remain underweight the fixed-interest asset class.

We have often highlighted in Market Perspectives and our Global Outlook charts the increasing concentration of the US technology sector in the US and global stock market indices. The extraordinary performance of the NASDAQ (which in April rose for thirteen consecutive sessions – its longest winning streak since 1992) and the flotation of SpaceX as a two-trillion dollar company in June add grist to that mill. A similar phenomenon has taken hold in Asia: suddenly, the largest company in Japan is no longer Toyota or Softbank, but Kioxia Holdings – a semiconductor company that few people have heard of. In Asia ex-Japan, regional weightings have changed dramatically as the technology sector has grown in importance.

After 5 consecutive quarterly gains the gold price declined 12% as investors priced in higher rates which in turn makes gold a less attractive asset compared to interest bearing alternatives. Despite this more difficult quarter the gold prices remains 20% higher than a year earlier and the structural reasons for continued price appreciation over the medium to long term, not least the significant level of buying from Central Banks globally, remain in place. It is also worth noting that when the US model portfolios first launched in April 2017 the gold price stood at $1,250 versus over $4,000 today.

During Q2 the ISA portfolios were +7.4% to +8.6%. This compares to Gilt Index +2.1%, MSCI UK +3.4%, MSCI World +14.2%, S&P500 +14.5%, Cash (1 month deposit) +0.9% and Gold -12.8%. All in GBP.
